STATEMENT OF REASON FOR DESIGNATION

109 BANK STREET

The former Ottawa Hydro Electric Commission Building, constructed 1934-35 at 109 Bank Street is of historical and architectural interest. The Consumer Electric Company was formed in 1901 to supply light and power to Ottawa. The company experienced phenomenal growth in the first decades of the 20th Century as the demand for power grew throughout Ottawa. In 1915, the company became the Ottawa Hydro Electric Commission. The Commission occupied the building until 1957 when it was purchased by the Guaranty Trust Company of Ottawa (now the Central Guaranty Trust Company of Canada). It has recently been extensively renovated on the inside.

In 1934-35, the new offices of the Ottawa Hydro Electric Commission were constructed in the Art Deco style to promote a modern stylish image. The three storey rectangular building was built to the designs of W.C. Beattie, an Ottawa architect. Features of the building that identify it with the Art Deco style include the metal spandrel panels that separate the second and third floors, the low relief sculptural motifs, the geometric moulding on the cornice and doorway and the distinctive vertical bands of windows separated by piers and thin columns. The building's prominent corner location and facades that face two streets reinforce its importance.

The interior of the building is not included in this designation.
