SCHEDULE "B"

APOTHECARIES HALL
(Gourmet Chicken House)

Standing a storey above the other buildings in its row, this building is exceptionally handsome. Of dark red brick set in common bond, the front facade is framed by raised buff-brick piers simulating quoins. The cornice is moulded and embellished, supported by four brackets decorated with acanthus leaves, paterae and pendants. The underside of the overhang has three recessed panels which are repeated on the wall-face of the cornice, but here they are more elaborately executed, with an arrow shaped motif in each end. The top two storeys each have three two-over-two sash windows with radiating brick voussoirs.

The ground-storey cornice is supported by piers which are wood-faced, with panels and capitals. The door to the upper storeys has two raised and moulded upper panels with round-arched tops, and two square bottom panels. The transom reflects this motif with tracery of two round arches supported by three finely turned colonettes. That this ornamentation was not uncommon in Paisley can be illustrated by examination of the street-scape in 1890.

The building is historically associated chiefly with its first owner - D. James Bain. Coming to Paisley as a boy, he received his first education and contact with pharmacy here. After accumulating capital in the United States, he returned in 1871, and this building was probably built around the time of the railway's first connection (1872).

As the second clerk of the Village he had gained experience in the running of the Municipality. He became Reeve in 1883 for a trying period when the Corporation was threatened with bankruptcy. Again in 1889 he was at the helm. He was a charter member of the Ontario Masons and the upper flat of his building was used as the lodge room for some time. When the Caledonian society allowed the Joint Stock Company to run the Caledonian games one year, Bain was naturally elected a chieftain. As he gave more of himself to public service, he gradually moved away from the business of drugs. The Apothecaries Hall became more an agency of the Grand Trunk Railway and various steam ship lines. Bain advertised himself as a notary public commissioner and conveyancer, and issuer of marriage licenses. Like his building, D. James Bain stands tall in the story of Paisley.
