Statement of Cultural Heritage Value or Interest

The Aurora War Memorial and Peace Park has excellent cultural heritage value. The Cenotaph is Aurora's only memorial tower, built to recognize the local soldiers from Aurora, King and Whitchurch who served and fell in the Great War. The Altar of Sacrifice at the base of the Cenotaph was dedicated in 1960 to those who died in World War II. Both monuments are set in the Peace Park, dedicated in 1992 as part of Canada's 125th anniversary and the Peace Park Across Canada Project.

Historical Value

Built in 1925, the Aurora Cenotaph is constructed on land once owned to military leader William Graham, who fought in the American Revolution, and also in the War of 1812. Shortly after the end of the Great War in 1919, Sir William Mulock donated $25,000 for a war memorial on 6 acres of land in south Aurora, on the east side of Yonge Street. Another $25,000 was raised by the communities of King, Whitchurch, and Aurora. The memorial tower recognizes the sacrifice made by 77 local men who did not return home after the First World War.

In 1960, the Altar of Sacrifice was erected to honour the 55 local men who died in the Second World War.

Architectural Value

The Aurora War Memorial has strong architectural value as Aurora's only memorial tower. It stands 73 feet high and was constructed of granite by the McIntosh Granite Company of Toronto. The lantern at the top of the tower is solid bronze, and the names of the fallen soldiers are engraved in lead.

Contextual Value

The Aurora War Memorial and Peace Park has important contextual value as one of Aurora's best known landmarks. The only remaining piece of parkland fronting onto Yonge Street in south Aurora, the War Memorial and Peace Park provides a green space and respite from the busy traffic of Yonge Street and the surrounding commercial developments. It is the site of Remembrance Day and other memorial services. Located on Yonge Street, the site of the War Memorial and Peace Park was deliberately placed on the main thoroughfare in Aurora, looking over the town.
