SCHEDULE "A"

Reasons for the Proposed Designation:

This Regency Cottage was built in 1870 by lawyer John Idington who later became a Supreme Court Justice. He resided in the property while his adjacent mansion was being constructed. The cottage later became the gate house for this mansion. In 1952, meetings establishing the Stratford Shakespearean Festival occurred in the house then owned by the Bells. The Bells were the first couple to jointly receive the Order of Canada. This has added to the historical significance of the structure.

One of the first cottages to be built in the buff-coloured brick, this building features many neo-classical appointments. These include the quoins, the sidelights and transom windows and the triangular-shaped pediment. This pediment creates the effect of an Ontario Cottage. Of other interest is the decorative Italianate brackets and the trefoil window in the pediment. The original masonry, windows and roof are included in this designation.
