REASON FOR DESIGNATION

Architectural Design or Physical Value:

The church was constructed in Arts and Crafts style with Gothic overtures, which was common in the 19th century for Canadian churches. The church features a tower with a gable on each of the four sides and the spire which is topped with a finial. The bell tower in conjunction with the spire rises 130 feet above ground level. Pointed arched windows and entranceways continue to contribute to the Gothic influences of the church's style. Facing the sanctuary, there are five memorial stained glass windows situated on the west side as well as three on the south side (the reredos) and six on the east side. A triptych stained glass window (three windows designed to illustrate one subject) is located on the north exposure. All stained glass windows contain a significant bible verse and a dedication panel. These windows all contribute to the church's beauty. The building and the tower are both supported by a number of buttresses that are in an early Gothic style.

Historical Significance:

Well-known Lindsay citizen Adam Huspeth donated the land to build the church when it became evident that a new building and site was needed for the growing congregation of St. Paul's Anglican Church. The cornerstone was laid on Dominion Day (July, 1st) 1885 and opening services were held on November 15, 1885. The designers of the church were Stewart and Denison of Toronto, and the contractors were McNeely and Walters of Lindsay.
