Statement of Cultural Heritage Value or Interest

The historic dwelling at 104 Main Street East was built in 1885 and constructed out of fired clay bricks with a soft lime based mortar. The dwelling sits on a cut stone foundation, arranged in a coursed layout. The original wood windows have been removed on the exterior of 104 Main Street East, however, many of the original window openings are still preserved. The arches above the windows are constructed with clay bricks, and are traced with header bricks above the arch voussoirs. The sills and lintels on the windows are cut stone. This dwelling was constructed in the Italianate architectural style. The Italianate architectural style traditionally features a projecting frontispiece with rooflines dressed with decorative eaves, both of these architectural features can be seen on 104 Main St East. The frontispiece features a broken pediment with a lunette window, and the roof line follows the gable with cornice returns. The windows throughout the structure feature a curved arch above the window opening.

This dwelling was originally part of a much larger piece of land that included Centennial Park. This land is significant to the community. In the late 1970s, an ancient burial ground was discovered on the Centennial Park land. This discovery on the land that was once part of 104 Main Street East is a window into history. It allowed the community to understand the traditions of the Neutral Peoples that had once inhabited this land. Upon discovery of this site, the found artifacts displayed images of animals that had roamed the land before their extinction, or relocated to other lands. During the archeological dig, the community gained extensive knowledge of Neutral Peoples burial traditions. These burial sites helped to depict the size, age, and gender of this community, and their day-to-day life and traditions.

The dwelling at 104 Main Street East is significant in supporting the character of the Main Street Cultural Heritage Landscape that was endorsed by Council. The scale, materials, and setbacks of this historic site contributes to the character of Ontario farm houses that were historically found along the Main Street corridor.

104 Main Street East is physically linked to this property, and helps demonstrate the size of the original lot which had incorporated Centennial Park.
