Historical/Associative

The property has historical value or associative value because it has direct associations with a theme, event, belief, person, activity, organization or institution that is significant to a community.

0 Ferriss Road retains significant historical value because it has direct associations with a family that is significant to a community, specifically the Ferriss family, one of the area's original settler families.

The Ferriss family is one of the area's oldest settler families and greatly impacted the development of Harrow and East Harrow, a small farming settlement located around Ferriss Road through the nineteenth century. The Ferriss family is the first to have been recorded TO settle in the area around the 3rd Concession, with the cemetery sitting on the family's original farmland.

The land was initially settled by Joesph Ferriss and his wife, Catherine Hahn Ferriss, in the mid-1790's, following the American War of Independence (1775-1783). Some members of the Ferriss Family were taken as captives by British settlers in Upper Canada during the American War of Independence, who organized raids into the United States on behalf of the British Crown.

Alongside this, the Ferriss cemetery would have been in the community known as East Harrow. East Harrow was a small hamlet located at the junction of the Third Concession and Ferriss Rd., and housed a small school, a small Methodist church, and various small shops, such as a grist mill, an inn, and a blacksmith shop. The community fell into decline as Harrow began to grow.

Contextual

The property has contextual value because it is physically, functionally, visually or historically linked to its surroundings.

0 Ferriss Road retains contextual value because it is physically and historically linked to its surroundings due to it being the only remaining part of the original Ferriss settlement and the East Harrow settlement. It is located on the original lands of the Ferriss family that was settled by Joesph and Catherine Ferriss.
