SCHEDULE "B"

The Elizabeth Street Pump House is an excellent example of a 20th Century municipal waterworks facility. The brick building shows an asymmetrical composition of Romanesque character. The building was constructed in three stages. The first stage, constructed in 1905, had a central entrance with semi-circular fanlight above that was flanked by two niches containing marble panels, which commemorates the construction of the building and waterworks system. The second and third stages were designed to compliment and expand the original building. The building remains comparable to its original form with only minor alterations over the years. These alterations from the building's original form would be simple, and relatively inexpensive, to restore or replace Secondary to the significance of the pump house building, designation would also acknowledge the historical importance of the site as the location of the "Engagement at the Forty". American soldiers, camping in this area on June 8, 1813, were bombarded by a British flotilla, and were attacked by the local Lincoln Militia and Indian units. The "Engagement at the Forty", two days after the defeat of the Americans by the British at Stoney Creek, forced the American army to fall back to Fort George. A plaque at the site commemorates the historical significance of this event.

These historical and architectural features provide a significant contribution to the character of the Town of Grimsby.
