REASONS FOR DESIGNATION

Description of Property

The property at 511 Main Street is located along the southeast side of Main Street in Glen Williams, northeast of the Credit River. The property is an irregular-shaped parcel and contains the first residential form building on the east side of Main Street entering the main village. The building forms part of the Williams Mill complex, connected to the other extant buildings through the existing parking lot to the rear of the property. The existing residential building on the subject property is a two-storey, red brick building with side-gable roof.

Statement of Cultural Heritage Value or Interest

The Joseph Williams House is an excellent, representative example of a Georgian Revival residential building within the community of Glen Williams in the Town of Halton Hills. Notwithstanding minor alterations to the exterior of the building, the defining characteristics of the Joseph Williams House have been conserved since its construction in the mid-19th century. Elements contributing to the Georgian Revival style of the building include the scale, form, and massing of the two-storey building, the three flatheaded window openings and stone sills. Although the original dual chimneys on either end of the gable roof and one-storey wooden porch are no longer extant, the existing building continues to serve as a representative example of the Georgian style in the community.

The property at 511 Main Street in Glen Williams has significant historical and associative value due to its associations with the Williams family, milling industry, and its later owners, the Hepburn family. Built for significant local businessperson Joseph Williams, the home served as his family home while Williams served as proprietor of the woollen and flour mills adjacent to the property. The home was captured in the 1877 Illustrated Historical Atlas of the County of Halton, which also profiled Joseph Williams and other members of the powerful local family. Despite a period of well-documented business failures and an attempt to run from his responsibilities to the United States, Williams would return to his community and continue making his mark in local industry. Williams installed an electric generator in the basement of the sawmill and sold this power to the community of Georgetown while converting the mill to a hosiery factory; towards the end of the 19th century, Williams sold the mill to H.P. Lawson who would form the Georgetown Power and Light Company.

The Joseph Williams House was later owned by local carpenter John Hepburn and his wife Isobel Hepburn who were involved members of the community. John Hepburn worked at the Apple Products Plant in the former sawmill next door for many years and operated a local Taxi service. Williams also was an avid curler, and he and Isobel Williams were also members of St. Alban the Martyr Anglican Church in Glen Williams.

In its original location along Main Street within Glen Williams, the Joseph Williams House has contextual value as a significant landmark at the south gateway to the community to the northeast of the Credit River. The mid-19th century residential building is physically, visually, and historically linked to its surroundings despite its current use as a commercial building. The Joseph Williams House is important in defining and maintaining the character of the area.

Heritage Attributes

The heritage attributes of the property at 511 Main Street that contribute to its physical and design value are identified as follows:
