GOSTLING-TAYLOR HOUSE, 263 REGENT STREET

Description of Property

The subject property located on 263 Regent Street, is known as the Gostling-Taylor House. The subject land is located north of Regent Street near the intersection of Regent Street and Johnson Street. The property has a moderate setback from Regent Street. The residence is set on a landscaped property, with a couple of mature trees. The access to the property is through a wide gravel driveway from Regent Street. Access to the main entrance is off of the public sidewalk through a concrete paver pathway.

Statement of Cultural Heritage Value or Interest

The property known as the Gostling-Taylor House has cultural heritage value or interest for its design and physical values, its historical and associative values and its contextual values.

263 Regent Street is a rare example of an asymmetrical Georgian style residence. The unique two-storey, three bay Gostling-Taylor House breaks away from tradition as it does not adhere to a rigid symmetry on the front façade. The exterior walls of the residence are clad wood clapboard siding, including beaded vertical corner boards. The roof of the subject property consists of two intersecting gable roofs with overhanging eaves at all three gable ends. The gable ends contain projecting verges. The roof features moulded wood fascia at the verges, plain fascia at the eaves, and plain soffit and frieze throughout. The window openings on the façade are vertical rectangular openings, containing double hung six-over-six windows. The windows are framed with moulded wood trim and a horned plain wood sill. Throughout the other elevations, the window openings feature plain wood trim surrounds with a horned plain wood sill. The main entryway is located off-centred on the façade, to the west. The doorway features a flat arched opening with moulded trim surrounds, a flat, two-light transom window, and a panelled door. The residence sits on a low foundation.

The Gostling-Taylor House has historical association with early settlers in the Niagara Region. The land, on which the subject property stands today, was granted by the Crown to Young in 1794. He was a carpenter who was involved in the construction of Fort George and maintenance of Fort Erie and Fort York. The house is also historically associated with Edward McMullen. Edward, appears to have constructed the current house on the subject lands in 1842 and is also associated with the construction of the adjacent property at 58 Johnson Street. He appears to have been involved in the local construction industry.

The Gostling-Taylor House has contextual value because it is important in defining the historic character of the area. 263 Regent Street is part of the historic fabric within Old Town, specifically the Downtown Character Area. It is also within the boundaries of the National Historic District. It lies in close proximity to various other historic buildings, including designated properties and properties listed on the Municipal Heritage Register. It acts as a character supporting resource for the Old Town. In addition to this, 263 Regent Street is also visually and historically linked to its surroundings. The house design and layout of the subject property, in terms of the setback and materials, is in keeping with the surrounding properties, especially the Part IV designated property at 46 Johnson Street. The asymmetric Georgian style of both the properties is also very similar.
