REASONS FOR DESIGNATION:

DESCRIPTION OF HISTORIC PLACE

The Meris-Fraser House is located on the west side of Kildare Road where it curves into St. Mary's Gate. The house was built in 1904 in the Edwardian style, and has been in continuous use.

HISTORICAL VALUE

This home was built in 1904 during rapid expansion of the town of Walkerville. The first owner was Albert Meirs, the Secretary-Treasurer of the Walkerville Malleable Iron Company (whose president, Harrington Walker built across the street). Albert Meirs also served on the Walkerville Town Council and as police chief. After Meirs died in 1935, the house was sold to criminal lawyer Gordon Fraser, whose family lived there into the 1960s. The present owners acquired it in 1989.

DESIGN VALUE

This house is two-storey, with smooth red brick, stone foundation, and an asymmetrical facade. This house has an unbroken, overhanging pediment on the main front gable, which has a shingled wall; there are two small side gables, one of which has a broken pediment. Windows on the main floors are all rectangular, with stone sills and lintels of rough brick in a slightly flared pattern; all have original or replicated wood sashes and wood storm windows; some have multiple panes; beveled glass is in two upper panes in front. A tall, square brick chimney is just front of the left side gable. The half-width front porch is L-shaped with smooth Doric columns; the door is paneled with a large single pane; the skirt is of shingles matching the attic gable.

The owners have identified the style as "Edwardian", noting the style elements used for fine buildings during and shortly after the reign of King Edward VII (1901-1910). In some ways the style is an understatement of Victorian styles, on this house with moderate-to-wide eaves, some articulation of the main walls, gables, detailed window surrounds, broken pediment, classical columns, and spindle work. (Other Edwardian features not used on this house are exuberant door surrounds and eave brackets.) The identity of the architect is unknown.

CONTEXTUAL VALUE

This location in the former town of Walkerville is surrounded by homes recognized for historic and architectural heritage. The subject house is located where the street curves into St. Mary's Gate; thus its setback is in-between those of its neighbours. To the south is a heritage designated house "The Cobbles", at 849 Kildare Road; to the north is the F. Allum house (heritage listed) at 833. To the east is a large lot with the Harrington Walker House at 1948 St. Mary's Gate (heritage listed).
