to By-law 95-084

REASONS FOR DESIGNATION

The present church site is an epitaph to the early history of the settlement of Esquesing's Scotch Block and the Presbyterian Church. The present Gothic Revival building was designed by a prominent Toronto Architect, James Avon Smith, RCA, and constructed in 1868.

The building is constructed of local limestone laid-up in even coursed rock faced blocks with three stacked smaller blocks between the larger blocks. The rectangular building has a front vestibule in front of a bell-cote tower as part of the main facade. Both the vestibule and bell-cote have wrought iron finials at the apex. All of the original building openings have pointed arch tops detailed with carved stone mouldings. The windows are of leaded panes, and a number of these are stained glass.

The interior of the church still has its original pews and entrance doors.

The building is surrounded by the Church cemetery with markers dating back to the early and mid 1800's.
