REASON FOR DESIGNATION

While the exact date of construction is unknown, it is possible that the carriage was construction at the same time as the main house on the Hamilton estate. The carriage house has historic value as one component of an assemblage of buildings, which comprised the estate of William Hamilton, who at one time had arguably the most prosperous business in Peterborough. Along with the Hamilton home and the original foundry offices located at the corner of Reid and Murray Streets, the major components of the estate are intact.

The carriage house retains its architectural integrity in construction materials and design. While the main carriage entrance has been filled in, the openings are otherwise intact. The building represents a good example of an estate service structure designed to compliment and enhance the property of a prominent family.
