Reasons for Proposed Designation

The Gore Cemetery is an example of a rural 19th century cemetery design characterized by a idyllic and attractive landscape.

Aboriginal Lands in Oneida Township were surrendered to the Crown in 1832 to be used for a church, a school and a burial ground. This area, where the 1st Line joins the 2nd Line, is known as the "Gore" at Clanbrassil.

The Gore Cemetery, Clanbrassil is one of Haldimand County's earliest cemeteries and is historically associated with the Presbyterian Church of Canada in Oneida (ca. 1868) and the United Church.

Records show the sale of plots began March 26, 1860. The pioneer section is separated from the "new section" by a driveway; the new section was developed in 1994. This cemetery has many of the founding families of the area interred within its boundaries. Surnames noted on the monuments can be associated with the development of the Village of Indiana, for example: Cranston, McConachie, Nelles, Stark and Smith.

The first death documented on a tombstone is June 11, 1843 for Margaret Elder, age 17 months, daughter of Peter & Jane Elder and, while there are several markers indicating deaths before 1860, it is believed that these burials were initially made near family homes and bodies later exhumed for reinterment to the Gore Cemetery.

The Gore Cemetery contains the graves of many of Haldimand's founding families and their descendants. It's design value is derived from the collection of monuments dating from 1843 to present day, and range from modest grave markers to more elaborate monuments with intricate shapes and decorative carvings.

In 1929, The Gore Cemetery Commission was established by the plot holders to own and manage the cemetery.

In 1949, an iron gate and two stone pillars were erected. In 1992, a plaque was placed at the east driveway; the inscription reads "Gore Cemetery. Est. 1843. This cemetery honours the pioneers of Oneida and their descendants."

The Gore Cemetery remains active and has approximately 800 interments (as of 2015). Grave markers are made of soft granite, marble and limestone and display carved motifs and epitaphs to the more modern design

Description of Heritage Attributes

The Reasons for Designation include the following heritage attributes:

1. The original markers and monuments, with their surviving inscriptions.
2. Iron gate.
3. Two stone pillars made from fieldstone with mortared and granite caps.
4. Plaque (dated 1992) placed at the east driveway; the inscription reads "Gore Cemetery. Est. 1843. This cemetery honours the pioneers of Oneida and their descendants."
