REASONS FOR DESIGNATION

The two-storey frame, single detached house and property are located at 168 Battery Street and is commonly known as Stanton House. It was built around 1836 by James Robertson Stanton. James Robertson Stanton, born in 1814 was the son of William Stanton, Commissary General of the British Army and Margaret Robertson, the first white woman in the district. James Stanton was the first Town Clerk and died in 1863. He is buried in the St. Paul's Church Cemetery. In 1866 James Stanton's wife, Martha Stanton, served breakfast to the invading Fenians. A few days after the battle, the Stantons used the house as a hospital. The house was also used to shelter slaves fleeing the United States.

The house represents the Italian style architecture. It is constructed of red brick and sits on a red brick foundation. The cottage style roof is supported under the eaves with turned rosette brackets. The bay window on the main floor is three sided with ornamental surrounds and roof brackets. The eighteen pane double hung windows match the rest of the house. The exterior red brick of the house has been painted and an addition has been added at the rear. The original long verandah at the front of the house has been removed. The remainder of the house is much the same as it was when the Stantons lived there. Key architectural aspects of the inside of the house remain intact. There is a staircase leading from the vestibule to the second floor. The hand railing is cyma and bead. In the living room there is a white and black marble fireplace with a marble mantle and enameled tiled hearth. There are carved pilasters with bead moulding on the sides of the mantle. Grape leaf mouldings topped by eight inch Italian mouldings surround the ceiling in the front vestibule and hall. The archway, which separates the vestibule and hall, starts half way up the wall and continues across the ceiling. It is moulded and sits on corbels with grape leaves and clusters for decoration.
