SCHEDULE "B"

Historical Reasons

This building was constructed in 1892. The first occupant was an accountant by the name of Claude B. Armstrong. From the early part of this century until the 1940's the property was owned by the Brock family which was involved in the sporting goods business. For most of the next three decades the West family owned the property. Recently, a number of commercial interests have occupied the building.

Architectural Reasons

The two and a half storey house at 165 Oxford Street East is an interesting blend of the Queen Anne and Stick styles. One can also detect the Eastlake influence in the decorative qualities of the building. It is the various architectural elements that represent the primary reasons for designation.

The exterior is characterized by a multiple gabled roof, decorative gables with ornamented bargeboards and brackets, lintels over the side windows, an offset left facade and a panelled main double door with a flat single light transom. The chimney is another prominent feature of the house. The Romanesque front t and side windows with brick voussoirs add to the unique appearance of the building. Both the front and large window on the east elevation have very attractive stained glass panels.

It is the front porch that is perhaps the most arresting architectural element at 165 Oxford Street East. The open porch and second storey balcony contain many intricate wood details. There is incised woodwork in a floral pattern and beading on the drop pinnacle with a knob on the portico and the incised columns on the porch and balcony demonstrate the presence of the Eastlake influence. The balustrade on the porch is particularly noteworthy.

Overall, the building presents a complicated massing and irregular silhouettes which articulate the diverse styles involved.

This property is an excellent example of a diverse architectural collage. There are elements of Queen Anne Revival, Stick Style and the decorative elements developed by Charles Eastlake. The building is a unique example of the fusion and variety of styles that have touched the architecture of the City of London.
