Historical Reasons

Designed by architect John M. Watt.

Architectural Reasons

Exterior

A 1½ storey house built c1928, 49 Riverview Avenue is stucco with some half timbering, asymmetrical high irregular rooflines, and exposed "rafters". The door and doorway are original with arched tops, an arched hood supported by brackets above a splayed reveal and stone steps. The windows are grouped. The downspouts are decorative, in early English style.

Interior

The large entrance hall has a terrazzo floor and a large niche; the ceiling is coved above a simple moulding and the central chandelier is in early English style. The living room has a vaulted ceiling with wooden beams above a simple moulding. The fireplace is in early English style of concrete tooled to look like stone, with a Tudor arch opening, no chimney opening, and an unglazed tile hearth. The lighting fixtures are original: an early English metal chandelier and 4 matching wall sconces.

Contextual Reasons

One of three in a row in similar style.
