Reasons For Designation

Historical:

The residence at 147 Toronto Street, known traditionally as Maple Hill, was constructed in 1868 by Charles Hammond Ross. Born in England in 1829, Ross came to Barrie at age nineteen to clerk in the general store of T.D. McConkey. He later became partner and then sole proprietor of the business until he retired in 1878 to become a private banker. In 1872 he was elected town councillor, served as deputy-reeve, and then mayor from 1887-88. In 1891 he was appointed the first police magistrate of Barrie and in that same year built the commercial Ross Block on Dunlop Street. Ross died February 14, 1912.

In 1914 Maple Hill was purchased by James Alexander MacLaren. Born in Quebec, the son of a Presbyterian minister, MacLaren's first career was a schoolteacher in Kent County. In 1893 he left teaching for a position on the staff with the Chatham Daily Banner. In June 1895 he purchased the Barrie Examiner from Andrew Hunter and remained as editor and publisher until his retirement in 1951. MacLaren was active in many community organizations but is remembered most as the dean of weekly newspaper editors. He died November 19, 1952 leaving Maple Hill to his widow Madeleine Haskins and their only son Alexander Fitzmaurice MacLaren.

Maurice MacLaren founded and was the senior partner of the firm A.F. MacLaren and Company, Chartered Accountants. Like his father, he was active throughout his life in many civic, charitable, and business organizations in Barrie. He died January 29, 1989, and bequeathed Maple Hill to the City of Barrie and the Barrie Gallery Project for use as a municipal art gallery.

Architectural:

Setting

Maple Hill was constructed above the Wellington Street ridgeline and faces south to the, at one time, unobstructed view of the town and Kempenfelt Bay. The still extensive grounds are now covered with mature trees. The immediate area surrounding the residence shows evidence of once well-cultivated gardens. The combination of natural setting and landscaping is considered to be a significant factor in the preservation of the residence.

Description:

Maple Hill was constructed in 1868 probably as a 2storey, solid brick, L-plan residence. At some stage the L was closed to create a square and the roof reconstructed as a truncated hip with fancy iron cresting at the peak. Portions of the original framing and wood shingles embedded in mortar remain in the attic and should be preserved as historical evidence.

As the north facade reflects this and other renovations, the area below the soffit and brackets to ground level on the north only is not part of the designation. The one storey tail extension to the north is not significant. The existing porch was added about 1914 to replace a 3 sided porch with bellcast roof and is not significant. A porch of sympathetic design would be considered an appropriate renovation.

Except as noted, the plan, form, and scale, window line and number, and south entrance and placement are part of this designation. The residence has unpainted red brick with buff brick quoins and a decorative buff brick belt course. The date of the roof dormer on the north is unknown but should be included with the wood soffit, facia, decorative brackets, and double-stacked, decorated brick chimneys as significant features.

The entrance on the south facade consists of a 4panel wood door with transom and sidelights of decorative stained glass incorporating a bird motif.

The windows are flat and consist of wood sash, double-hung, 2X2 with wood lugsills and buff brick voussoirs. The exterior painted wood shutters and some original iron hinges and tiebacks have survived. The one storey east and southeast bay windows were probably added about 1905 and on the southwest more recently. The second storey door on the south was originally a window.

Interior:

Maple Hill is a centre hall plan. All painted wood door and window trim, baseboards, and 4-panel doors with some original hardware, survive throughout. Some ground floor rooms have wood panelling below the windows. The ceilings are approximately 3.5 metres high and have a moulded cornice. The original approximately 15 cm tongue and groove floorboards have been covered with hardwood flooring.

The northeast room has a plaster ceiling medallion and also a plaster arch with carved leaves and panelling in the niche created by the bay window.

The ground floor southeast and southwest rooms each have one fireplace with a marble (one white and one black) mantlepiece.

The centre hall stairway is a J-plan and has a closed stairwall with flat scrolled brackets and turned handrail supports and newel.
