STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Description of Property – Old Smith Houses, 66-70 Shepherd Road

The properties at 66-70 Shepherd Road are located on the south side of Shepherd Road east of Kerr Street. The properties contain the historic buildings known as the Old Smith Houses.

Statement of Cultural Heritage Value or Interest

Historical Value or Associative Value

The Smith Houses are of cultural heritage value for their historical associations with the Smith family, first generation Scottish immigrants who settled in the area in 1907. The two houses are rare examples of adjacent houses representing two generations on the same property.

The houses also have cultural heritage value for their associations with the stonehooking industry in Oakville. The type of lakestone shale used on the houses was dredged from the bottom of Lake Ontario from the 1830s until after World War I, when concrete was more readily available. This was known as 'stonehooking' and became a successful industry between the Credit River and Burlington Bay along the lake. Small boats called stonehookers were used, along with barges, to collect and transport the large pieces of stone, which were lifted from the lake with long rakes. The stone was used to construct building foundations and, in some rarer cases, full walls like on the Smith Houses. Many of these foundations and walls have been covered up or replaced with concrete over the years, making the Old Smith Houses rare and significant surviving examples of this industry and type of construction.

Design Value or Physical Value

The Smith Houses are of cultural heritage value for their architectural significance as a rare pair of shale stone houses built by two generations of the same family at the beginning of the 20th century. The homes were built with the influence of the Arts and Crafts movement and, apart from minor cosmetic alterations, are largely unaltered from their historic appearance.

The house at 70 Shepherd Road is unique in Oakville, and was constructed to reflect the architecture of the Smith family's ancestral home in Aberdeenshire, Scotland. This two storey house was constructed c.1911 of shale stone with a natural finish. The intersecting gable roof has three triangular dormers on the front façade of the house. The original house was symmetrical with the front door in the centre of the façade; a third bay was later added to the south end of the house, which included a third dormer to match the other two. The original portion of the house and all additions are included in this designation. Other notable features of the house include a field stone chimney, arched stone radiating voussoirs, multipaned wood windows and wood trim.

The house at 66 Shepherd Road is also unique as a shale stone house built with the influence of the Craftsman style which was popular in Canada in the early decades of the 20th century. Constructed in the 1930s, this 1 ½ storey house has a front gable roof with shingled gables. The front porch was possibly built in the 1940s and has a shingled front gable, stone plinths and simple wood columns. Other notable features of the house include the shed dormer, multipaned wood windows and concrete lintels and sills.

Contextual Value

The Smith Houses are considered to be of cultural heritage value for their contextual significance as rare survivors of the early 20th century settlement in the Kerr Street Area. The houses were constructed on the westerly most point of an 11-acre orchard which stretched back to Sixteen Mile Creek.
