Statement of Cultural Heritage Value

4249 Highway 7, known locally as the Emily Cemetery Chapel, is an excellent and representative example of a cemetery chapel constructed in the English Gothic style. It retains many of its original features that are key aspects of this architectural type including its stone wall structure, lancet windows, and bell-cote. Many of its features are original with minor restorations. Designed by Toronto architect George Roper Gouinlock, the building has historical significance as part of the Emily Cemetery which opened in 1872 when the community identified the need for a non-denominational buried ground. The chapel was constructed in 1929 and donated to the cemetery by Flora McCrae Eaton, Lady Eaton, as a memorial to her family and was originally named the McCrea Memorial Chapel. Lady Eaton was born in Omemee in 1880 and is an important figure locally because of her significant impact on the architectural development of Omemee in the early twentieth century. The first ceremony in this chapel took place in 1929 when the cemetery groundskeeper, Stephen Paragreen, passed away. The property has contextual significance as a defining built feature of the Emily Cemetery and as a local landmark in Emily Township. It retains an important contextual relationship with the surrounding cemetery grounds.
