Schedule "B"

Statement of Cultural Heritage Value or Interest

The building at 15074 Yonge Street, at one time known as "Poplar Villa" and then later as "Chateau," was constructed in 1912. The building has cultural heritage design value as a fine example of the Queen Ann Revival Style. The traits that are exemplified in this house are its asymmetrical massing with multiple surfaces, its multiple rooflines, its windows of varying types, and its wrap-around verandah with round columns. The building is three storeys in height with a cottage roof punctuated by gable end dormers and a turret. The one storey wrap-around porch has a gable over the front entry stairs and a dome roof structure at the corner.

The building has physical value as a showcase for the use of concrete and in particular molded concrete blocks that were prevalent between 1890 and 1930 in a residential construction. There are at minimum five different types of molded concrete block used in the building as well as various cast and poured in place concrete elements. The North American Concrete Block and Tile Company was located in nearby Gormley, Ontario, and as a result there are other examples of molded concrete blocks used for residential construction in the area; however the use of molded concrete blocks in an elegantly designed house for an affluent individual or family is very rare.

The building has contextual value in supporting the character of the "Old Town" of Aurora, and in particular the historical neighborhood dating to the late nineteenth and early twentieth century that extends from Tyler Street at the north to Ransom Street at the South and from the west side of Yonge Street to the natural feature midblock at the east. This building is one of the grander if not the grandest heritage building of the neighborhood and serves as a landmark within it. Sitting high over Yonge Street on a park-like lot it is linked to the importance of Yonge Street as the main street of historic Aurora.

Description of Heritage Attributes
