SCHEDULE “B” TO BY-LAW NO. 2024-0063

REASONS FOR DESIGNATION

Description of Property

The subject property is located between Queen Street and Albert Street in the community of Georgetown, and historically fronted onto Queen Street. The property is a rectangular lot and features a two-and-a-half storey stone structure with a mansard roof and additions. The northwest façade, the original primary elevation, faces Queen Street.

Statement of Cultural Heritage Value or Interest

The property at 5 Albert Street has physical and design value as a unique example of a Second Empire mansion with Queen Anne Revival influences in the community of Georgetown. This landmark home, built for its prominent owner Edward McCannah in the late nineteenth century, the existing residence known as Grey Vernon features various roof slopes including its mansard roof (previously covered in slate tiles), dormers of various shapes and sizes, large windows framed with enriched surrounds and mouldings, a variety of decorative elements, asymmetrical facades, irregular rooflines, overhanging eaves, towers, and detailed textures. The design and detailing of Grey Vernon serve to reflect the wealth of its owner at the time; these details together with the costs associated with the construction of the residence as well as its prominent location on a rise above Queen Street represents the prominent position its original owner once had in this area around the Grand Trunk Railway line. Grey Vernon demonstrates a high degree of craftsmanship and artistic merit in its form and massing, elaborate and varied roof forms, carved wooden detailing throughout, and its use of wooden and stone detailing throughout the exterior of the building.

The property at 5 Albert Street has historical and associative value as it is directly associated with Edward McCannah, long-time station agent for the Grand Trunk Railway, a member of the Town Council, as well as a Tax Collector, and his wife Hannah. McCannah was a successful man in the Town who constructed several other houses along Queen Street. The property is associated with the growth and success of the area following the establishment of the Grand Trunk Railway through Georgetown. Following McCannah's death in 1932, like many Second Empire residential buildings, Grey Vernon was converted into rental units and has continued to be used for this purpose for almost one hundred years.

The property at 5 Albert Street has contextual value as it is important in defining and maintaining the late nineteenth and early-twentieth-century character of the area surrounding the former Grand Trunk Railway Station in Georgetown. Located on a rise above Queen Street in Georgetown since its construction in the late-nineteenth century, Grey Vernon remains physically, functionally, visually, and historically linked to its surroundings in the residential neighbourhood; its connection to Queen Street has been altered with the 1950s infill of two homes along Queen Street, however it can still be viewed in its prominent location along Queen Street. Grey Vernon has been identified as a landmark in the community and serves as an example of one of many homes along Queen Street constructed by Edward McCannah at the turn of the last century.
