STATEMENT OF CULTURAL HERITAGE VALUE

13 Fox Street is a representative example of a vernacular 19th century dwelling. The one and-a-half to two-storey irregular plan building is composed of two parts, each with a gable roof. Wall dormers break up the roofline. The building sits on a stone foundation and has red brick envelope coursed in a stretcher bond. Jack arched window openings are topped by brick voussoirs and some wooden sash windows remain. A number of window openings are framed by functional wooden louvered shutters.

13 Fox Street is associated with Edmund Gendron, who worked as a shoe clerk associated with the Gendron Shoe Pack Firm and served as a Town Councillor in 1898 and 1899. The Gendron Shoe Pack Firm, an important business in Penetanguishene founded by Edmund's brother Cornelius G. Gendron produced footwear used by Canadian forces during the First World War. Edmund Gendron purchased the property from his wife's father John Donahue in 1895 and owned the property until 1915.

13 Fox Street has the potential to yield information that contributes to the early 19th century history of Penetanguishene. The property was previously bisected by trail then roadway that connected the Town to the military garrison. This road was rerouted by 1881. Further, records indicate that the property may contain remains of a 19th century tavern. The remains of the former roadway and tavern has the potential to yield information that could provide details of Penetanguishene as it transitioned from a military base to Town settlement.

13 Fox Street is important in supporting and maintaining the 19th/early 20th century character of the historic Town of Penetanguishene. 13 Fox Street is located within a residential block developed in the 19th century/early 20th century and is a large corner lot surrounded by mature trees and large open grassed areas. While many residences along Fox Street have been modified, 13 Fox Street's positioning, scale, massing and architectural detailing remain and contribute and support the legibility and character of the Penetanguishene as a historic village.

13 Fox Street is historically linked to its surroundings. Gendron Drive, which is located along the eastern property boundary is named after the subject property's former owner, Edmund Gendron.
