This house is one of the finest example in Ontario of the Italianate style of architecture which became very popular after the period in which it was built. It is remarkably well preserved and almost unchanged since its construction in 1864. It was built by Mr. Thomas H. Parker, a prominent merchant and first president of the Board of Trade in 1877. Mr. Parker was the Mayor of Woodstock in 1878 and 1879. In 1911, Mr. M.W. Rowell was leader of the Ontario Liberal Party and resided here during his term as Provincial member for Oxford. The house is pictured and described in Marion Macrae and Anthony Adamson's, "The Ancestral Roof".
