SCHEDULE "B"

Reasons for the designation of the property at 100 Queen Street West (City Hall):

The property at 100 Queen Street West is designated on architectural and historical grounds. The design for Toronto City Hall by Finnish architect Viljo Revell was selected in 1958 in an international architectural competition initiated by Nathan Phillips, Mayor of Toronto, and City Council. The Toronto architectural firm of John B. Parkin Associates with John C. Parkin as principal in charge assisted during the construction period, 1962-65. Toronto's fourth City Hall, opened by Governor-General George Vanier on September 13, 1965, provided administrative space and a Council Chamber for the City of Toronto, as well as offices for the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto.

The Toronto City Hall complex features a large public square containing a two-storey podium with two office towers which curve to frame a low domed saucer-shaped Council Chamber. Contemporary building technology and materials, and unique forms were used in a progressive Modernist design based on Classical principles. The structure is constructed of poured concrete. The 20-storey West Tower and the 27-storey East Tower have windowless back (convex) walls clad in precast ribbed concrete with marble inserts, and inner (concave) stainless steel and glass curtain walls. The glazed podium with a cantilevered parapet roof extends into an elevated colonnaded walkway which outlines the perimeter of the public square. A ceremonial ramp leads from the east side of the square to the roof of the podium. Three public entrances are placed in the south face of the podium.

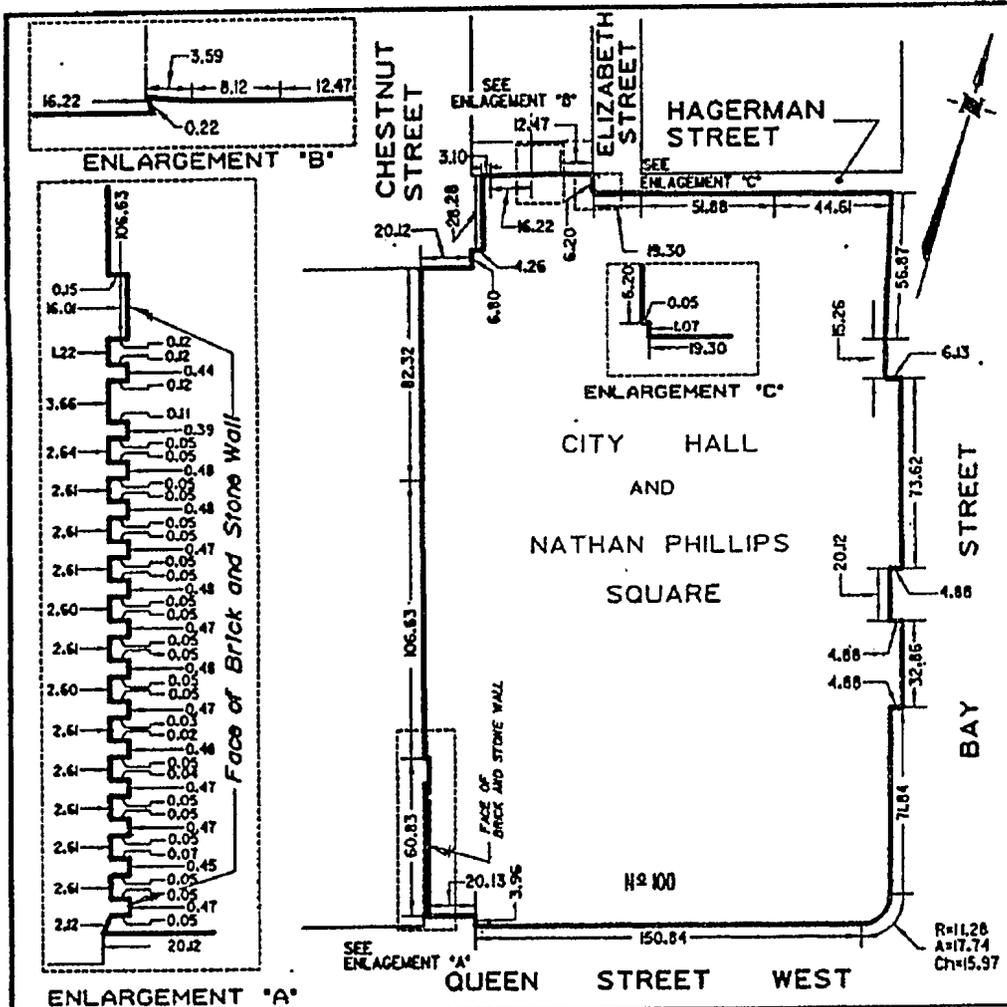

The interior displays concrete walls, terrazzo floors, laminated wood finishes, stainless steel elevator doors, and specially commissioned Knoll furniture. The entrance foyer opens into a central open rotunda with clerestory windows. At the center of the rotunda, a monumental mushroom-shaped column rises from a recession (with the Hall of Memory) to support the Council Chamber above. Around the column, two curved staircases lead to a mezzanine level, two public elevators provide access to the Council Chamber, and a private elevator serves the Councillor members' lounge. To the east and west, banks of elevators serve the towers. The Council Chamber with its domed roof is divided on the east-west axis into two unequal parts (an amphitheatre for Council meetings, and a private anteroom with an upper level lounge and related facilities) by a parabolic floating wall.

The forecourt south of the building is reserved as a monumental public gathering place named in honour of Nathan Phillips. The focal point of Nathan Phillips Square is a reflecting pool (spanned by three concrete arches) with fountains which is used as a winter skating rink. The Square contains two flat-roofed service buildings and "The Archer", Henry Moore's sculpture (the Peace Garden is a later addition). Toronto City Hall occupies the north half of a 12 3/4-acre site bounded by Queen Street West, Bay Street, Hagerman Street, and the East Wing of Osgoode Hall. The Square is separated from Queen Street by low-level plantings. Toronto City Hall was specifically positioned on its site to relate to Old City Hall to the east, which shares this important downtown open space.

The Modernist design of Toronto City Hall created an identifiable image and civic symbol for Toronto. The City Hall complex is one of the earliest examples of a design with a highrise tower, low podium, and open public square with underground parking in the planning history of Toronto. Toronto City Hall is Viljo Revell's masterpiece and Toronto's most famous landmark.
