REASONS FOR DESIGNATION

252, 262 and 268 James Street South,
Hamilton, Ontario

252 JAMES STREET SOUTH

At the south-west corner of Herkimer and James Street South, business magnate Tunis B. Griffith erected a palatial home in 1891 that superbly exemplifies the bold and flamboyant character of late Victorian architecture.

Designed by noted local architect W. A. Edwards, 252 James Street South is an outstanding example of the Richardsonian Romanesque style of architecture -- the finest of its kind in Hamilton. Characteristic of this style are the wide, rounded arches set on short columns, the projecting round and square towers, the steeply pitched roofs, and the solid masonry walls enlivened by rock-faced stone and terra cotta trim.

Inside, the spacious entrance hall and stairway reflect an elegance of decoration in the elaborately carved woodwork and the colourful stained glass panels.

Owners of the home have all been prominent men of the community. The original owner, Tunis B. Griffith, achieved success as manager of the Hamilton Street Railway; Sir John S. Hendrie, businessman and politician, owned the home during the time he served as Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, and his son, Major William Ian S. Hendrie, a distinguished military man and president of the Hamilton Bridge Works Company, inherited the home from his parents. In 1937 the building was sold to Sam Henson and subsequently converted into apartments.

Important to the preservation of the building are the original features of the east, north and south facades, including but not limited to the masonry walls, the hipped roof with cross gables, the slate roofing, the high, patterned chimneys and projecting towers, the windows and doorways, and the carved terra cotta and sandstone trim; and, in the interior, the vestibule and entrance hallway with its fireplace, doorways, stairway, and stained glass windows.

262 JAMES STREET SOUTH

Number 262 James Street South was built in 1892-93 for the president and manager of one of Hamilton's leading industries, Henry P. Coburn of Sawyer and Massey Company Limited, manufacturers of agricultural machinery.

Construction of the house immediately followed the completion of the Griffith mansion next door to the north, and Coburn's fashionable new home relates well to both its high-styled neighbours. Together, the group has a major impact on the historic character of the James South streetscape.

Representing a restrained urban version of the popular Queen Anne style, 262 James Street South nevertheless displays a lively composition of gables, octagonal bay, and hipped roof. Characteristic of the style are the combination of different materials and the delightful richness of detail evidenced in the picturesque spindlework balcony, the polygonal dormer with tent roof, and the variety of window shapes. The original front verandah that extended from the octagonal bay, across the facade and down the south side of the house has been removed.

Following the Coburns' residency, the home continued as a single-family dwelling until 1941, when it was converted into apartments by Sam Henson.

Important to the preservation of 262 James Street South are the original features of the east and north facades and the south gable wall, including but not limited to the hipped roof with cross gables, the slate roofing, the high, patterned chimneys, the original dormers, the brick walls with decorative sandstone and terra cotta trim, the spindlework balcony, the shingled gables, the original windows, doors and sunburst brackets.

268 JAMES STREET SOUTH

In 1894-95, the successful Hamilton financier Charles Counsell had his new residence constructed at the corner of James Street South and Markland Street. The eminent local architect James Balfour designed the stately home in the fashionable Queen Anne style, giving equal importance to both principle facades. Seen in the context of its 1890s neighbours, Counsell's home is a dynamic and forceful partner in a group that contributes substantially to the historic character of the streetscape.

Architecturally, 268 James Street South is a notable example of its kind, displaying the characteristic complex composition of projecting gables, porches and bays. Contemporary fascination with different materials found expression in the use of rock-faced ashlar, brick and patterned wood shingle to delineate each storey. Prominent architectural features are the porches, which are supported by classical columns set on raised foundations of stone. The Counsell residence is one of a few buildings still existing that are the work of James Balfour, who was well-known for his design of Hamilton's old City Hall.

Typical of the period, the house expresses the financial success of its owner, Charles Counsell, who made his fortune by investing in real estate, stocks and private banks. Subsequently, in 1923, the home was purchased by Robert Innes, a leading industrialist who headed Dominion Cannery Limited and Zimmerknit Limited, and who served on boards of other manufacturing and financial firms. In 1953, Sam Henson purchased the property, which had already been converted into apartments.

Important to the preservation of 268 James Street South are the east, south and north facades, including but not limited to the front-gabled roof with cross gables, the masonry walls, the shingled gables, the porches, the original dormers, windows and doorways.
