SCHEDULE "B"

HISTORICAL REASONS:

The congregation of the British Methodist Episcopal Church, then known as the African Methodist Church, was organized at some time prior to September, 1856, at which time it was holding services in a building on Thames Street. Sometime between 1868 and 1871, the present Beth Emmanuel B.M.E. Church, a white brick Gothic Revival structure, was erected at 430 Grey Street. In later years, the building was raised for the construction of a basement.

Beth-Emmanuel is the oldest surviving black church in London. At the time the congregation was founded, the City had a large and prosperous black community, many of whom had escaped from slavery in the United States via the Underground Railroad. Some had lived in the area since the Wilberforce settlement was established at Lucan in 1832. Some of the names associated with the Beth-Emmanuel congregation are noteworthy: John Brown, the abolitionist, preached at the Thames Street Church in 1858, before his ill-fated raid on Harper's Ferry the following year. Richard B. Harrison, who played the leading role in Marc Connelly's "Green Pastures" (1930), attended this church as did his brother, The Reverend William Harrison. In more recent times, the late Paul Lewis, one of London's best-loved citizens, was an official of the congregation.
