Architectural Reasons

This two storey, frame house may date from the mid-1850's as referenced in the will of Sheldon Odell. Based on a temple-plan form for the facade, this is a very simple vernacular interpretation of the Neo-Classical or Greek Revival styles current at that time. The deep eave returns further define the style characteristics. The most important feature of the house is the prominent front entrance. The transom has etched glass employing floral and geometric detailing. And, although covered with siding, the recessed original door frame is discernable with all of the period characteristics. The entire house has been covered in vinyl siding, although none of the window openings have been altered. The foundation is stone, and the original roof material would have been wood shingle.
