Built in 1908, this large vernacular house has an unusually elaborate gambrel roof sheathed in slate. The slates are cut into fish scale and square tiles. Decorative brackets and shingles embellish the uppermost part of the front gable. An Oriel window is also seen on front facade. Projecting bays on west and south facades can be seen. There is a stone foundation. The large front landing is created by the overhang of the front gable with the support wall comprised of rusticated concrete blocks.
