SCHEDULE "B" TO BY-LAW 1990 - 200

REASONS FOR DESIGNATION

The Owen Sound Bus Station was built in 1945, the building permit being issued on October 1 of the same year. It was built by the Ontario Motor Ways from London, Ontario for their own use. The building was built as a bus terminal with a garage which is assumed was built at the rear of the property. The builder was Mr. M. Nicol and the building was built at a cost of $10,000.00.

The Owen Sound Bus Station is being designated for its architectural value or interest because it is a style not common to the main street of Owen Sound but given its massing and strong horizontal lines which continue down the side of the building, it is a pleasant end to the block of buildings.

This building is an example of Art Moderne style common in the United States in the 1930's. The influences of this style were streamlining and industrial design, images appropriate to a bus station.

Features of this building common to the Art Moderne style are strong horizontal features of the canopy and polychromatic brick banding, the flat roof, the curved corner, the glass block window that turns the corner and asymmetry. Typical of this style is the use of new materials such as the extensive use of glass block, steel casement windows and stainless steel window frames on the first floor. As well as being a strong horizontal feature, the canopy served important utilitarian functions, it provided shelter from the rain while waiting for buses and shade from the southern exposure.
