SCHEDULE "A" TO BY-LAW 1993-22

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE

The building at 74 Allan Street was built during the mid-to-late nineteenth century, and is believed to have been originally located on the property at 39 King Street (old street numbering) adjacent to St. Jude's Church. It was moved to its current location shortly after W.S. Davis purchased the property in 1920.

The building is one of a number of old Oakville structures that were moved to new locations. Francis Robin Ahern, in her booklet Sketches of Oakville, A Small Town, described the origins of this trend:

"The tiny shipping village of Oakville, its chief commodity timber and its large river providing power for sawmills, was fortunate in attracting the carpenters and shipwrights who already had worked for William Chisholm in his shipyard at Burlington and had followed him to work in his shipyard at Oakville. Several of these men had received their initial training in Scotland, and went on to construct many of the buildings in the village.

Because of their expertise and the fine quality of lumber available, many structures still stand after 150 years, on their original 12" squared beams of hand-hewn timber. To demolish such handiwork was unheard of, however, and large and small buildings were, when necessary, jacked up and moved to a new foundation. Certain movers gained a reputation for success in these delicate operations, using skids, greased logs, pulleys and other means, together with teams of draft-horses."

While situated at 39 King Street, the building was occupied by Dr. John Austin Worrell, the son of Cannon John Bell Worrell, Minister of St. Jude's Church for over 34 years.

Cannon Worrell was born near London, England and educated at King's College, Cambridge. In 1847, Worrell came to Canaga. He studied theology at Trinity College, Toronto, and was rector at Woodstock, Smith's Falls and Oshawa before becoming Minister of St. Jude's in the spring of 1869.

Dr. John Austin Worrell eventually left Oakville for Toronto, where he became an educator at Trinity College (later affiliated with the University of Toronto). In his later years, Dr. Worrell was appointed Chancellor Trinity College.

The property at 74 Allan Street, to which the house was moved in the early 1920's, has had a number of owners and tenants over the years. William McCraney, M.P. owned this property from 1874 - 1875, and from 1882 until 1920, Miss Annie Curran, who later became Mrs. H. O'Connell, owned the property. In 1920, the property was sold to William Sinclair Davis, a real estate broker who, through real estate and other successful business ventures, eventually became one of Oakville's wealthiest men.

By the 1920's W.S. Davis had acquired a number of properties in the Town, which he rented to tenants. Among these properties were 74 Allan Street, and the neighbouring properties to the north and south at 70 and 78 Allan Street.

william and Catherine Rae, parents of the current owner,

, became tenants of W.S. Davis at 74 Allan Street in the late 1930's. William and Catherine Rae were originally from Aberdeen, Scotland.

William Rae was employed for a number of years by the United Suburban Gas Company (another business in which W.S. Davis had some involvement), and he and his wife

Catherine were long time members of Knox Presbyterian Church. During the 1920s and 1930s, a number of other

Scottish families came to live in this area of Oakville, and as a result, it came to be known by many townspeople as "Little Glasgow". William and Catherine Rae eventually purchased the property at 74 Allan Street in 1952. Their daughter, assumed ownership of the property in 1983.

ARCHITECTURAL SIGNIFICANCE

The house at 74 Allan Street is a simple frame 1 1/2 storey house, originally built in the Oakville vernacular style. Although the house has received a number of alterations over the years, the house retains much of its original form and appearance.

The house was originally clad in narrow wood weatherboard, which has now been covered with aluminum siding. The original windows were double hung 2/2. These have been recently replaced. Photographs form the 1940's indicate that the house originally had a front porch with gingerbread trim. The doorway of the house is original, and displays ornate Victorian detailing.

CONTEXTUAL SIGNIFICANCE

The house at 74 Allan Street is an attractive contributor to the streetscape. The property is positioned adjacent to the Old Oakville Heritage Conservation District, and the First and Second Street Heritage Conservation District, and its architecture is characteristic of the homes found within both of these districts.
