Dear Sir/Madam:

By-law 1988-76, which designated 207 Reynolds Street as a property of historical and architectural value and interest, contained an error in Schedule "B", the legal description of the property.

The second paragraph of the description repeats the first paragraph, but should have read "Thence North 50 degrees 55 minutes West parallel with Reynolds Street, 48 feet."

At its meeting of September 18, 1989, the Oakville Council passed By-law 1989-223 which contains the correct description and repeals the former By-law.

In reviewing our file on this matter, I believe that a copy of By-law 1989-223 was not sent to you. Attached is a certified true copy of By-law 1989-233.

We apologize for the delay in forwarding this By-law to you.

Yours sincerely,

Michael K. Wood

THE COUNCIL ENACTS AS FOLLOWS:

MAYOR

SCHEDULE "A"

to By-Law 1988-76

REASONS FOR DESIGNATION

James Freestone, a bricklayer, saved his earnings to purchase in 1877 the property at the corner of Reynolds and Palmer Streets from G.K. Chisholm.

To further his career, Freestone moved to Toronto in 1885. He built many homes in the up-scale Spadina and Queen Street area and also busily began working on many of Toronto's commercial buildings.

In 1887 James Freestone built the house at 207 Reynolds Street. The Collector's Roll of 1888 shows that the house had tenants.

In 1924 the Freestones sold the property to Fredrick McCallum, a local banker. The McCallums lived in the house until 1977. It features an L-shaped plan and is constructed of red brick with buff coloured quoins and arches. The typical window shape is segmental and contained within is a round-headed window; the main floor exhibits a bracketed bay; the gables are enhanced by decorative bargeboard. Original cedar shakes exist underneath the shingles.
