Schedule "A"

Reasons for Designation

The subject property is recommended for designation on the grounds of its design value, historical value and contextual value. Designation is to include the original exterior stone walls, as well as the original roof pitch and structure. The fieldstone building, constructed in 1858, is the former Riverside Schoolhouse and is an example of a simple one room stone school house built in the mid 19th century. The house served as a school for almost 100 years and was the site of the first Agricultural School Fair in Canada in 1909, also Andrew Taylor, a noted regional historian and published author, attended this school. The stone school house is considered a landmark because it was the community centre for the settlement area south of Galt. Lastly, the building is historically linked to its surroundings because the location of the school was intended to serve pupils from both sides of the river and led to the construction of the Footbridge.
