Reasons for Proposed Designation

Historical Reasons:

Occupancy and/or role record

Constructed during a period of expansion and growth in the community of Petrolia this structure was built under a Federal commission awarded to the architect, Thomas Fuller of London, Ontario from a design he had submitted. As a result of being awarded this government contract, a number of similar structures built during this same period can be found in towns throughout Southwestern Ontario. Original design called for the Post Office and Offices of the Inland Revenue and Customs on the main floor, the residence of the Postmaster on the second and the residence of the caretaker above that on the third. An annex on the south side of the building housed an examining warehouse for Customs purposes and for the collection of Provincial and Federal taxes. In later years the second storey was converted to office space and only the caretaker continued to live on the premises. Following World War One, one of the small back rooms was taken over and used as a "Militia Room". The Petrolia Legion also used space in this building until removing to their new facilities on King Street. The structure served as Petrolia's Post Office from 1894 to 1964 at which time new facilities were built and the Post Office operations were relocated. The contract for construction of the Old Post Office was signed under the direction of the Department of Public Works in January of 1892 and the premises became functional in the spring of 1894. Joshua Garrett of Petrolia was the principal contractor. From 1964 to the present a number of commercial establishments have operated from the premises.

Architectural Reasons:

This structure was built to reflect a "Romanesque" style of architecture, one that is uniquely North American and made popular by the American architect H.H. Richardson. One of the prominent features of this style is the bold use of masonry and what has been termed the "Romanesque Arch" (round headed arches over doors and windows). The use of rough-cut stone and red brick were popular building materials used in this style of construction as well as the use of smooth, wide brackets under the eaves. Buildings constructed in this manner projected a sense of heaviness and solidity and the Old Petrolia Post Office is an excellent example of this style. Romanesque remained popular until the late 1800s when it eventually merged with other architectural styles of the late Victorian period.

When a Notice of Objection has been received, the Council of the Town of Petrolia will refer the matter to the Conservation Review Board for a hearing and report.

DATED AT THE TOWN OF PETROLIA THIS 19TH DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1997.
